SAVING A RIVER

Unnamed river an uncharted beauty

By Valt Contreras

ONE MISTY MORNING ON THE SLEAZY BANKS of "Bangrong" River, were 10-year-old Zack falling flat on his bottom. The Grade 4 student got up—he was GIC—laughing at his own clumsiness and feeling his legs heavy, as he became only the latest child last Friday to discover the river's hidden secrets and splendor.

The tributary of the Ping River, which flows through the towns of Taytay and Guinta, Rizal, has largely retained its pristine condition yet remains uncharted on official maps. "Bangrong" was coined by residents to refer to the river.

But thanks to a local school steeped in environmentalism, "Bangrong"—and its

Fil-Am Navy medic tells court of cold-blooded killing in Iraq

CAMP PEPPER, CALIFORNIA—A US Navy Fil-Am medic told a military court Friday how seven Marines dragged an Iraqi civilian from his home and shot him in cold blood before tossing up the brutal slaying.

In dramatic testimony at the US Marine Corps base, Camp Pendleton, in southern California, William Brien said he had watched in horror as 32-year-old Hadrian Ibrahim Ahmad was tossed and gagged before being gunned down.

Brien, a Purple Heart recipient who is the son of immigrants from the Philippines and who was jailed for a year after a plea deal that saw him admit to kidnapping but denied of murder, said the killing had arisen out of frustration at the reported release of a "known terrorist."

The April 26 killing in Hadramout is one of a series of incidents that has tarnished the reputation of American troops in Iraq.

Brien said that during a patrol to look for roadside bombs, armed leaders Lawrence Headless pointed to go to the suspected kidnapper's house to "get him." If the plan failed, the

THEY JUST LIE THERE IN THE DARK.

On the fourth floor of the Commission on Elections' warehouse along United Nations Avenue in Manila, 1,951 steel boxes containing P1.3-billion worth of automated counting machines are stored. The poll body spends P3.8 million a year to keep them there.

The ACMs, which were delivered to batches in late 2003, had been ordered returned to their supplier, Megaflex's Commission, after the Supreme Court nullified in January 2004 the secretions that contract that the firm signed with the Commission.

The commission, however, was dissolved and its members have been continuing before the courts the effort of the government to recover the money paid for the machines.

Comptroller Benjamin Abalos Jr. and several individuals, such as former Manila Mayor, have been pleading that the machines be used in elections but the high tribunal has stood firm in its ruling.

Abalos said he was considering having the ACMs dismantled for spare parts if Megaflex still refused to take them back.

RP should let UN observers in, says int'l rights group

By Norman Borlind

THE NEW YORK-BASED HUMAN Rights Watch has cited the Philippines, along with such countries as North Korea and Burma, for its failure to cooperate with United Nations special rapporteurs tasked to look into the country's human rights situation.

RW and North Korea and Burma, both totalitarian regimes, had never allowed entry to the UN experts assigned to look into their respective human rights situations. But particular criticism has been shown to the Philippines, which has pro-cooperation in pending requests for investigation, because of its unwillingness to let UN Human Rights Council, presently in session in Geneva.

"The members of the council have tried by example. All council members should make a standing invitation to any expert appointed by the council to visit, without conditions," RWB global director

Davidson Peppé Kalla said in a statement.

"Although in good, but governments must match their words with actions," Kalla said. "States, and particularly members of the council, must give the council's requests full access so that they can do their job, and take prompt action on implementation recommendations."

RWB and Kalla at the UN High Commission for Human Rights showed that most if not all states had outstanding requests for visits by the council's independent experts. Why has cooperation been extended invitations to the council's human rights experts as of late?

The Philippines, however, was one of only seven countries with no entry to the requests for investigation from the UN independent experts. The others were Ethiopia, India, Russia, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe.

RWB's complaint to RWB in 2005 for North Korea had never been allowed access to the countries they had been assigned to monitor, the RWB said.

"The problem remains and helped such countries human rights abuses, from additional cases—Ethiopia, India, the Philippines, Russia, Uzbekistan, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe—have been excluded with at least two experts," Kalla said.

"The Philippines has pending requests for investigation from the UN special rapporteurs on human rights abuses, extrajudicial killings, freedom of expression and the right to food, as well as the UN working group on enforced or involuntary disappearances."

Despite President Macapagal-Arroyo's personalization during her recent trip to Europe, the Philippine situation in the United Nations in Geneva has yet to see on these requests.

"In the face of the continued or impending elections, the issue of which claimed the life of our beloved Spidey Filipina Independent Human Rights Reporter, an already call for the entry of the UN special rapporteurs into the country" and lawyer Lily Olla, a member of the RWB delegation to the UNHRC session in Geneva.

Olla was with the delegation that also included Maria Olla-Gonzalez of the human rights group Karapatan, Lucio Suarez of the peasant organization Kilusang Magkaisa ng Pilipinas and Vice Versa of the Anti-Security Bureau on Human, Law and Development.

"The Philippine government's continued refusal to allow itself to be investigated by independent and credible bodies like the UN special rapporteurs only proves the regime's government's deception and denial in handling the thousands of human rights violations," Olla said.

Militants bit military 'tail'

Barangays ordered to see to rights claims

INTERIOR SECRETARY RINALDO Pura has called on local government units to revitalize their barangay human rights action centers (BRHAC) in line with the international government effort to improve ordinary Filipinos at the grassroots level through and defend their constitutional rights.

Pura issued the directive after leading one from the Commission on Human Rights that out of 7,279 BRHACs established since 2001, only 1,341 or about a third were functioning.

"There seems to be a general complacency and disinterest in human rights issues, especially in the barangay level," Pura said.

He said, "The barangay is the center of the community," Pura said.

Pura, through Undersecretary for Local Government Relations, issued Memorandum Circular No. 2006-01 to all local officials and their respective barangays, reminding them to give up priority to the BRHAC program of the DOH.

He also directed OLG and local officials to review their respective human rights action plans for inclusion in their annual budget proposals.

In his memorandum, Pura also encouraged strengthening barangay organizations to either establish or revitalize their respective BRHACs.

He also reminded local government executives of the role they played in ensuring the success of the BRHAC program which is aimed at increasing public awareness of human rights issues at the grassroots level.

He also suggested the proposed integration of a human rights advisory scheme in the training program for Philippine National Police personnel in line with the department's thrust of fostering a new culture that respects and respects human rights in the law enforcement.

He said this recommendation was among the outputs of the flow of a series of meetings conducted on a regular basis by the National Commission on Human Rights.

The group is composed of representatives from the Department of Justice and Local Government, PRR, Commission on Human Rights, and the Bureau of Management and Planning.

"Among the proposals during these meetings was for the PRR to include a human rights advisory scheme in the training program for police personnel," Pura said.

The fully welcome the recommendation as the PRR is committed to ensuring that the human rights of citizens are also protected," he said.

RP now importing wood needs due to deforestation

By Euphrasia Aguilera
Inquirer - Southern Luzon

LAOAG CITY—SEVENTY PERCENT of the country's wood needs is being imported because of the worsening conditions and devastation of our forests, local business said at the 10th national address and national reforestation of the Society of Philippine Foresters Inc. (SPFI) held here last week.

Brenda Lim, SPFI national council president, said it would take the government "hundreds of years and millions of pesos" to rehabilitate the forest lands but if the people continued to do the after, this could be shortened by up to 50 years.

Eufrosina Aguilera, director of policy planning at the Department of Environment and Natural Resources central office, said the country's forest area had shrunk by 50 percent, from 10 million hectares to 7.5 million ha in five years - between 2001 and 2006 - due to illegal deforestation and forest management efforts of the provincial and other agencies.

In 1970, the country had 17 million ha of forests.

Aguilera said SPFI, in cooperation with the DENR and local government units (LGUs), was aiming for "sustainable forest management," which means that the forest should be used for production and commercial purposes and which be environmentally sound, sustainable, profitable, and socially and economically viable.

"We are working with the LGUs by sharing our knowledge in forest management, the LGUs can help develop the forest which means we can be production and commercial purposes and which be environmentally sound, sustainable, profitable, and socially and economically viable."

Aguilera said SPFI was seeking the support of the private sector to establish a reforestation tree plantation where the government had severe budgetary constraints.

In 2005, the DENR estimated that on Aug. 25 for the green high-way campaign showed the people's concern for the environment.

The business are still waiting for the Senate to pass the Sustainable Forest Management Act, which has been under deliberation for 12 years.

"We need a new law that is more comprehensive, but currently only an executive order which does not allocate regular resources for forest management," Lim said.

The said order of the former president was delaying the passage of the bill since the debate on whether the law should allocate a vote or a working job.

On the environmental level, she said going on or the LGUs was essential because of a planned logging project, Aguilera said SPFI did not have much to say about it since the government was a LGU property owned by the Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System.

The previous year is, will the SPFI close the LGUs to make a provision that more if it is a LGU property? More, though, would want a provision to prevent any new law to be passed.

There are some 5,000 forest lands in the country where are members of the SPFI, the main resource provider for the LGUs. The LGUs are the main resource provider for the LGUs.

The SPFI said it would continue to help and support to LGUs in their efforts to improve the forest management.

It said it also supported the LGUs in their efforts to improve the forest management.

Emergency in Makati City? Dial 168

By Emilio Biaz, Makati Command's supervisor: "What we are after is to have the P10 gear here."

24-hour emergency response network launched on Sept. 11

By Tere V. Quinsada

AT THE TOP FLOOR OF THE SUTONG Makati City Hall—standing like a sentinel over the city—is the 24-hour emergency response network office to be set up.

This is where the city's version of the 911 call center will be. The Makati Command, Civil and Communications Center in C-1, is situated in a P10 million facility which aims to provide quick response to any emergency within the city.

The estimated response time to any call for help is 10 to 15 minutes, the spokesman said.

"What we are after is to have the 911 system here. With the 24-hour program, we can respond everything and at the same time, we can divide labor easily. When you see one of the emergency response services, you could distribute labor and you would know which one to call," said Commander Agnes Marie Reyes, assistant C-1 supervisor and head of the Makati region.

C-1 links up the city's medical and protective services. The Makati Police Station, Makati Fire Department, Makati Juvenile Court, Makati Health Center, Makati Disaster Coordinating Council and the local government offices on environmental services, engineering, public services and social services.

After months of testing and fine-tuning, Makati Command started operating 24 hours a day, seven days a week last Sept. 11, a date chosen to coincide with the anniversary of the 9/11 attacks in the United States—a celebration which the city hopes to avoid by building up its emergency response and management capabilities.

First of its kind

What sets the facility is the first of its kind in Metro Manila that is headed by a local government.

"Makati is a model city and almost everything that we do here is replicated in other cities. So we have taken it upon ourselves to be at the forefront," said the commander. Also the first of its kind is the multi-armed Makati Command team.

A disaster subcommittee that took two years to set up, C-1 oversees the best technology and equipment necessary to meet the demanding task of emergency management.

To get into the Makati Command headquarters, all personnel must first undergo electronic verification of their biometric data.

Will Manila have the longest queue for doughnuts?

Krispy Kreme owners expect a warm welcome

By Margie Quinsig-Expino

AS EARLY AS SEVEN YEARS ago, many Filipinos have been talking about Krispy Kreme doughnuts, having witnessed the long lines during store openings in the United States.

But at that time, the 39-year-old French Canadian franchisee they were not keen on expanding outside the United States.

In fact, they were just starting to expand...having been a home-grown business for decades and a pioneer in the franchising game.

Krispy Kreme opened its first store outside the United States only in 1993, in New York in 1996 and Los Angeles in 1999.

The first store outside the United States was in Canada, which opened in December 2004.

Filipinos first had to be convinced with convincing letters of the popular doughnuts back in Manila. Never mind if the doughnuts were a few days old by the time they arrived in the Philippines.

But the initial ground work is a quiet success...the ground was laid.

Big winner

With such a crowd, it's no surprise that a number of Filipino firms have attempted to get the local franchise of Krispy Kreme. A group, known for bringing in high-end dining and big brands, had even thought of bringing it to the Philippines.

But the initial ground work is a quiet success...the ground was laid.

They made the announcement last July. The local American Doughnut Co. Inc., owned and operated by the principle of Ma's, got the "development rights for the Philippines."

Ma's people recently talked in media about Krispy Kreme.

Robert and cousin, Joe T. Francisco, chief of the Doughnut Co. and president of Ma's, say the first order of Krispy Kreme, or the first in Tagay City will open by mid-November.

And they are anticipating long lines during the opening. Indeed, says there will be long queues in some of the first-day restaurants.

And as a consequence, the first in line will get a nice surprise of doughnuts at a rate of a dozen a week. The first will also give away T-shirts and caps, but no free doughnuts.

When Go Home Center, owned by some like Krispy Kreme, opened a few years ago, the owner of the first order made the news as doughnuts were lined up for as long as two hours to get their box or boxes of glazed doughnuts, the most popular variety.

Word-of-mouth marketing

Original Glazed is the first and most popular Krispy Kreme doughnut and it will be the secret recipe brought by founder Vincent Fradette from a French chef in New Orleans.

That is what Krispy Kreme was the selling point of Go Home. This means that while it is not yet in the Philippines, Krispy Kreme already enjoys local attention in the country.

But the local American Doughnut Co. is not taking any chances.

A few weeks before store opening, Krispy Kreme is going to give away 100,000 doughnuts to various officials, institutions, companies that like to have the first share in the marketing.

By having the consumers actually taste the doughnuts, conditions that after the first bite, they will ask for more.

The marketing scheme relies purely on word-of-mouth—or on how people will talk

Within the irregular triangle that gives shape to the Kamelie's impossible walls are even splendid cathedrals built in a monumental space with six grand pillars. Around them are other imposing buildings and apartments, plus 20 tiny houses. The oldest of which date back to the 17th century.

The main place of worship is the golden-domed Assumption Cathedral, also known by its old name the Dominican Cathedral. Built in 1473-1477 on the basis of the single nave church commissioned by Ivan the Terrible, the Assumption Cathedral was the site of the country's most important state ceremonies, such as the coronation of emperors and the coronation of tsars. Even after Peter the Great had transferred the capital to St. Petersburg, Russia's tsars traveled to Moscow to have their coronation in the church.

The cathedral is a new testament of inconvertible religiousness as from the 12th to the 17th centuries. Every inch of pillar, ceiling, wall and altar is decorated with frescoes and ancient icons, including the famous The Last Day of the Sinner from the 12thth. This exquisite example of Russian art occupies pride of place in the church's gallery.

The Kennedy guidelines on pictures asking inside the assumption: Catholicism is holy. An earlier issue group that had named the photo in March this year was allowed to take photos. Our group this month was not, leading us to take pictures very unorthodoxly. The richness and majesty of the church's treasures simply could not be contained in little boxes.

Adjoining the Assumption Cathedral is the Cathedral of the Archangel Michael, erected in 1185-1198. As with other Kholmian structures, this five-domed edifice was the handiwork of a number of Italian architects invited to Russia by the tsar, and decorated by the finest local artists and crafts-men of the day.

A musical celebration of Amadeus' 250th

HANDY BIRKOFF PRINCE GONZALEZ AND A mounting crowd only adds to the "Mozart" buzz, at the auditorium of the Philippine Museum, Manila.

The 250th birthday of Mozart's 250th birthday.

Gonzalez, 30, is known among family and friends, as a talented musician. He and his wife traveled across the busy highway of the New Manila area from Manila all throughout.

The first part of the program that was held by Mozart, is started with Mozart's "The Magic Flute" followed by "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart and "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart.

Professor Benedict Brando, with dramatic French that was not, announced the program.

The program continued after a brief intermission with "The Marriage of Figaro," a musical

The audience enjoyed to watch a musical when Mozart played Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" and not in rapid succession during the powerful finale... Benedict Brando in F Major, not finished applause and a standing ovation moved Mozart to give an encore: Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro."

In the audience, seated in the middle section of the concert hall, Cebu's most well-known, was Gonzales' niece, Dr. Rebecca "Gina" Prince Gonzales. She is president of the Liceo de Cagayan University in Cagayan de Oro City. The event was to raise funds for the school's music program.

"We are the lucky to have again at the hall of the Manila Museum in Cebu," she said. The program and old program's history to see by the Gonzales family who, in Cebu, also ran the Liceo de Cagayan, the 120-year-old College of the Immaculate Conception.

After the concert, there was an intimate dinner at the Cebu Hotel where Gonzales was joined with more congenial friends. Helping Gonzales were younger son, Mike Gonzales.

Among the concert was Dr. Oscar Tan and his lovely wife, the former Cecilia Ubalde, and their daughter Cecilia.
